Memorial Chapel, since its dedication in February of 1928, has been the sight of many convocations. This year a number of them were held in the Orange Mill. "Convos", though no longer mandatory, still are an excellent source for stimulating academic thought and in a few cases provide a few laughs.

CONVOICATIONS

RETROSPECT

Freshman Orientation Week is a time traditionally designed to introduce new students to the U. of R. Activities which have continued through the years are Mountain Day, the Yeomen sponsored computer square dance, and the annual freshman/transfer dress-up dinner. This year's addition — "Almost Anything Goes" game day.

The "Pajamarino" was once a part of the week's activities. Students dressed in pajamas enjoyed a student show at the Redland's Theatre after a trek through town. Picture taken in 1972.

This school kicked off its 75th anniversary celebration with a Town & Gown Gala party. Actually comprised of four concurrent parties, the Town and Gown brought students and alumni together in an exquisite atmosphere full of fine food, dancing, and entertainment. A break in the parties gave the participants a chance to hear the U. of R.'s birthday song sung to Hallelujah chorus and see the lighting of a huge birthday cake in the Chapel. The evening climaxed in a spectacular array of fireworks.

TOWN AND GOWN GALA

All Gala locations will remain open from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. However, there will be a break in the musical entertainment at individual sites during the parade and special Jubilee entertainment at the chapel.

Homecoming was highlighted by a gala of events including the Quad-Fair, Dorm Decorating, and the opening convocation. Of course there was the homecoming game. Spectators were entertained by marvelous half-time show featuring a grand birthday cake and a field full of seventy-five dancing candles. After the court was presented the show closed with an outstanding fireworks display.

December 1982 marked the 35th anniversary of the Feast of Lights. It started with J. William Jones and still continues today under the direction of Jeff Rickard. The Feast began with nothing more than the choir and an organ. Today it has grown into a phenomenal presentation complete with brass ensemble and life-size tableau (that people often mistake for slide pictures).

As part of the 35th anniversary celebration, the University Choir was joined by over 200 choir alumni to sing "Laudate Dominum" and "Antiphon" on its Saturday evening presentation. These former choir mem-

Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall rise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

In its 75th year the university exploded with activities. "Celebrate" was the key word and ASUR the way by sponsoring numerous social events. The Heats, the Pearlie Kings, The Untouchables, and Lisa Nemzo performed for appreciative crowds while Chariots of Fire, On Golden Pond, and Raiders of the Lost Ark drew large audiences. The Oktoberfest, Mardi Gras, and the many Homecoming activities showcased student initiative and wholehearted participation.

ASUR was also hard at work on academic issues. Students are now voting members of all search committees and can serve on the Academic Review Board. The Senate's responsibilities were redefined giving it more direction. ASUR and the university community grappled with the difficult issue of institutional priorities with students strongly voicing their concerns.

1982-83 has been one of challenge and celebration, and ASUR has proven equal to both.

1982-83 Spurs ushered in the new school year by helping all the freshmen and transfers move into their dorms and by co-hosting an evening of fun and games for the new students.

In addition to the usual service activities such as serving banquets and ushering plays and convocations, this year's Spurs also got involved with the 75th Anniversary celebration by helping out at the Town and Gown Gala. Plans were made to have a Spur Reunion on Alumni-Founders Day in honor of the 50th anniversary of Spurs on this campus.

Planning and fund raising for the Spur Spring Spree took place throughout the year. The Spree, a formal dance for the entire student body, is an annual event.

U. of R. Spurs also welcomed other Spurs from the University of Nevada-Reno and Northern Arizona University for the annual Regional Convention held here in November. The theme, "Shape up: Ourselves — Our World," was one the Spurs tried to adhere to throughout the year.

The national Spurs were founded February 14, 1922, under the leadership of Jessie Donaldson at Montana State College (now Montana State University) at Bozeman. Expansion began in 1924 when Washington State College (now Washington State University) in Pullman heard about the organization and inquired about it.

Sixty years later at the 1982 National Spur Convention held in Reno, Nevada, Spurs became "The International Spurs."

The University of Redlands Spurs are celebrating their 50th year of service on our campus beginning in 1983.

The Women's Center at the University of Redlands underwent many changes this year, from moving to a new location to publishing its own newsletter. Primarily a place for women to learn, explore, talk & research, the Women's Center is also responsible for producing programming that is pertinent to women. Under the Directorship of Maureen McRae and with funding from ASUR, the Center did many things including Christianity and the Women's Movement, a bluegrass concert featuring recording artist Robin Flower, a retreat to the mountains, and a series of brown bag discussions.

Statement of Purpose

We are committed to advancing the civil and human rights of Chicano students on campus and supporting the struggles in the community where possible. We do this in the interest of uniting all Raza.

M.E.Ch.A. is aware and proud of the rich culture of our people, and express this heritage in art, music, teatro and baile folklorico presentations.

M.E.Ch.A. is a Chicano and Latin American progressive movement organization. "Movimiento" means that the organization is dedicated to the movement to gain self-determination. "Estudiantil" identifies the group as student-led. "Chicano", an indigenous term from the southwest, is a reaffirmation of Mexican and Indian heritage. Finally, members affirm their roots from "Aztlán", the birthplace of the Aztecs originally located in today's southwest.

This year M.E.Ch.A. sponsored a mariachi at the Quad Fair, sponsored a dance, and brought in a guest speaker on Chicano art. In addition, they organized Cinco De Mayo Week.

THE UNIVERSITY OF REDLANDS AT SEVENTY-FIVE: A PENCIL SKETCH

It begins with a dream, an opportunity, and a challenge. Together Town and Gown seized the hour and the University of Redlands became a responsibility. Chartered on the 25th day of November in 1907, the University of Redlands did not admit its first students until September 1909. The intervening year served as a seedbed for honing concepts, seeking a faculty, appointing trustees, and determining academic policy. The story of the University of Redlands at seventy-five is the story of an institution much changed from its founding and yet in spirit unchanged from its original commitment to educate not only the mind but also the heart.

The birth of a college located in the city of Redlands owes itself to a peculiar set of circumstances. A devastating earthquake in San Francisco in 1906, the failure of an American Baptist college in Los Angeles, the energetic skill of the Rev. Jasper Newton Field, and the determination of businessmen in Redlands. That the American Baptists stunned by the damage of their enterprise in the north, frustrated by financial problems with their school in Los Angeles, were looking for a new site is understandable. After urging his parishioners at the First Baptist Church of Redlands to lobby for their town, Jasper Newton Field spoke on a hot July day to the Redlands Board of Trade urging the city of Redlands to seek "this prize."

Weeks of intense work, lobbying and personal visits by many people and a persuasive offer of a gift of land from Karl C. Wells and as much as 50,000 or more dollars from a city subscription captured the site committee in Los Angeles. Field extolled the advantages of Redlands, a city known for its culture, beauty, and commitment to secure a university. The Los Angeles Time noted "his address was scholarly, logical, fulfilling, and elegant beyond compare. It was applauded at almost every sentence."

"I came, I saw, and I was conquered," allowed one of the site committee members during the June 1907 visit to Redlands. And so Redlands was chosen and Field assured the new board of trustees and the citizens of Redlands that it would "simply be a high grade, first class, broad-gauged college" fostered by the founding denomination.

FROM BIRTH PAINS THROUGH THE FIRST WORLD WAR

It was far from easy starting a college in 1907 during one of America's worst financial panics. Planning moved ahead in spite of it all, and Dr. Field was selected the first president of the University. In 1909 as the first classes began, the Administration Building was being completed, a Los Angeles architect was planning a formal campus design, and prosperity had returned to the land. When surveying the present campus, it is hard to realize that in the summer of 1909 a man stepped off the train in Redlands, hired a cab to take them to a hotel, and:

"Tourists?" asked the cab driver.

"No," the man replied.

"From Los Angeles?" as he clucked to the horse.

"No. I'm a professor and I came here to teach in the University of Redlands," stated S. Guy Jones.

The driver threw back his head and laughed. "Man," he said, "there ain't no such thing. There's a lot of sand and an old vineyard out there, but there ain't no university."

An old winery and the decadent remains of a brick yard marked the place where the campus of the university was to be. In the dust of the summer day it was a discouraging scene to the nine professors and 52 students of the new university.

A graduating class of four, including Field's daughter who transferred from Stanford because her father wanted senior graduates, proudly accepted their diplomas in June. By 1913 Wilson had replaced Taft as president, income tax became part of the law, and Redlands, its entire economy bound up in world-famous navel oranges, experienced a devastating freeze which destroyed the crops and many of the trees. The University greatly suffered. Offers of extended credit, continued faith among the ones who supported the school, along with some deferred billing saw the young school through the crisis.

By the time World War I began, additional construction had accomplished much at the University including Bekins Hall and the President's Mansion (now Alumni House). Field resigned in 1915 and the University's growth again became restrained by the problems of the great war and by the later recession of 1919-20.

Traditions began with the important links which we presently share. The "R" in the local mountains was created by energetic undergraduates in 1913-14. The Zanja Fiesta became an annual musical extravaganza, a school newspaper, fraternities and sororities, athletics and campus life began to coalesce. Most significant was commitment to the liberal arts tradition and to the education of students who would be sent forth to do good and undertake service to improve their world.

PROSPERITY AND EXPANSION

The 1920's began with Harding, moved through Coolidge, and concluded with Hoover. It ranged from the carefree flappers to a bubbling economy masking a spate of difficulties. Victor Leroy Duke, member of the original faculty and man of vision, guided the University during the 20's. He and the trustees rejoiced in the Rockefeller Foundation grant which enabled great strides to be made academically. More dormitories were added to the residential campus, additional classrooms were built, a handsome Memorial Chapel now anchored the north end of the quad, and the Alma Mater as we know it was unequivocally adopted. The University was getting to be well known in the southland and was taking its place as a fine private undergraduate institution.

DEPRESSION AND ADOLESCENT PAINS

Depression brought change, Hoover was out, Franklin Roosevelt was in, silent films were gone, and talking pictures were here to stay. President Duke died suddenly and left a campus in mourning but a campus intact and vigorous. The Thirties brought a close campus rapport, and influx of educated, bright and challenging faculty, and Clarence Howe Thurber became the third president. Thurber brought with him the air of cosmopolitan East, a highly charged academic commitment, and a determination to make Redlands' students "not leaners but learners." The depths of the depression were reached in 1936, and it proved that Redlands was no camelot either. Thurber resigned and the University was vying within itself for a sense of direction.

When he said to the selection committee, "Do you think I am the man for the job?" it was clear that in Elam J. Anderson the University would have a president of singular determination and will. Anderson minced no words. He was aware of the religious beginnings of the University, and he was also committed to its academic excellence. He was not afraid of trustees, and he defended many of his faculty in a sensitive time of transition from a regional university to a university with national outlook. Anderson spoke well and often and expanded the University's image.

In those days, crossing the quad was not as pleasant an experience as it is today.

WORLD WAR II AND A NEW SPIRIT

Who would have thought that the 1940's would bring even more calamity into a world already besieged with problems. World War II profoundly changed the University. With Elam Anderson's sudden death in 1944 and with the V-12 units taking classes at Redlands, the school was in for a new phase in its growth. With the building of a new commons and the coming of a new president from the East, George H. Armacost, a new phase of university life began. It would be a time of continuity, new social life developments, a vigorous building campaign, and an increase in the endowment. Those post-World War II years saw veterans returning as students and the dorms neatly burst their seams.

THE NOT-SO-SILENT 50's
For reasons not readily apparent the

quiet 50's were not that. Peppery Harry Truman left office and was replaced by a general nicknamed Ike. McCarthy and the black list, Korea, and A-bomb testing did not a quiet environment make. At the University more dorms were built, facilities were enlarged, and a maturing had taken place based on the skein of commitment to mind and heart begun 50 years earlier. The University, enhanced by its capacity to change and grow, responded to the needs of its students with new academic innovations.

George Armacost ultimately concluded 25 years of service as president (retiring in 1965). During his tenure enrollment were up, the pool of students high, government money for higher education plentiful. As a result, academic achievement, sporting achievements, and student living innovations excelled at a high pace.

REACTION AND REUNION: THE 60's

South Vietnam. No one took much notice. As the 1960's evolved it was as if an era came to a close almost at once and ushered in national atmosphere charged with acrimony, debate, and confrontation. Vietnam was upon us. The University experienced little of the travail which confronted higher education as a whole, but the changes came and a new era was soon ushered in. As George Armacost retired, the baby-boom students were no more, inflation began and then recession, and an experimental college known as Johnston was begun at the University. The controvery surrounding that experimental college caused further realignment in Redlands' liberal arts tradition.

THE 70's: TREADING DEEP WATER CAUTIOUSLY

The presidency of Eugene E. Dawson came about as a nation examined and agonized over its foreign policy and domestic instincts and experienced what economists said never could happen — unemployment, inflation, and an economic uncertainty called “stagflation.” Meanwhile, curriculum changes, casting out certain aspects of past curriculum, along with a declining student pool began to effect American colleges. The University was no different and turned its attention from adding to its capital facilities to the imperative of increased endowment, student scholarships, and the reality of higher tuition needs.

Certain innovations from the 60's provided positive experiences for Redlands. Excellence in scientific programs, firm commitment to liberal arts, and the advantages of foreign resident programs. A new college for returning of older students was begun, Alfred North Whitehead.

The end of the 1970's brought about intense discussions and a firm resolve to secure the University's future and keep undiminished its purpose of liberal arts education with quality.

VIGOR AND HOPE AT THE DIAMOND JUBILEE

Following the resignation of Dr. Dawson in 1978, the new (and current) President Douglas R. Moore inherited an institution vulnerable to the challenges afflicting all private higher education: less money, higher costs, fewer students. At present the strength of the campus, the ongoing growth of its programs and outreach, the quality of its students and its higher enrollment is the answer that the University community gave to the priorities of President Moore.

This is what the 75th anniversary is all about. It speaks of achievements and of work and of efforts to care for, guide, and exert love for an institution. Not content to suffer mediocrity and willing to learn from its travails, the University has always remained part of the world and committed to sending out graduates who seek to improve that world. Jasper Newton Field remarked, "Let us not say we will rest on our laurels: let us look up and toil on until we have achieved greater things than we have yet known."

And so we ask you to celebrate seventy-five years with us. But in celebrating, look with us to the potentials and the places to serve in the next seventy-five years. The possibilities for the University, its staff, faculty, students, alumni, and friends are illimitable. Its original resolve remains bright: to serve the mind and the heart.

In the Spring of 1982, 13 girls (freshmen) took it upon themselves to go to the Pan Hellenic Council and petition to pledge as freshmen. This allowed the Alpha Sigma Pi sorority to continue and provide a third choice of sorority life for the women on the U of R campus.

The Sigmas were founded originally on December 5, 1914, as a literary club. Its only living charter member is Elsie Elliot Severance.

Today the sorority has 19 members: 13 actives, 4 pledges, and 2 honoraries.

In RETROSPECT . . .

The long nights burning the midnight oil . . . missed deadlines . . . staffless meetings . . . anxiety attacks . . . relief. Relief?!! Yes! Relief! It's finally done and sits here before you! What began as a vision is now reality — The 1983 La Letra Yearbook, RETROSPECT. As you look through this book I hope you get a sense of the University's rich history. Many hours have been put into this annual and I would like to take this time to thank those who have helped this effort materialize:

Our Staff — Thanks to all who were willing to put up with two inexperienced editors and "gut it out" until the end. Kim F., Leslie, Marianne, Kumi, Bob, Jenni — Thank you! and especially you, Sue, for your advice and experience when we needed it.

Our Photographers — Kyung, Bill, Miranda, and Jim — thank you for making it through the first semester. Kari and Marianne — you two went the distance. Thank you for those extra hours you put in. Your works are beautiful. Mary H. — I really appreciate the drive and enthusiasm you had coming in 2nd semester. Finally, "Princess" — I am deep in gratitude for your understanding and patience in filling out our last minute requests.

Tom Imming — Thank you for waiting on us and for the encouragement along the way.

"Ace & L.H." — I really appreciate your putting up with me, or should I say your putting me up. Without your hospitality, this book would never have got done.

Kim Aldridge — What's a co-editor to do without his other half? Thank you for all your hard work! Without you
